

A Humble Abode.

Building Cypriote Society in the Globalizing World of 3000 BC.

- Problem: The Chalcolithic period in Cyprus has often been described as egalitarian and somewhat backward.
- Aims: To provide a more comprehensive view on the social structure of the period by focusing on the buildings that people inhabited.
- Method: Investigate how these houses were constructed, used and reused, by applying soil micromorphology (figure →)
- Results: There was significant variation in status and wealth within society, and the house was used as medium to communicate these differences.

