

Elena Charalambous

Studied psychology at Panteion University of Social and Political Sciences in Athens. Earned a master's degree in addictions from Institute of Psychiatry at King's College London (MSc in Clinical and Public Health Aspects of Addiction). During her MSc she gained clinical experience with drug addicts as part of her practicum. At the present, she is a Ph.D. student at Clinical Psychology program at University of Cyprus. Her research interests focused on attentional biases and psychophysiology in anxiety disorders, especially in social anxiety, social anxiety and smoking, alexithymia and treatment outcome in drug addicts, alexithymia and emotion, group interventions with individuals presenting work-stress.